Tips & Tricks

For private scholarships, funds are found by searching, mostly online, through preset search engines. There are a number of different ways to approach the search. Many students search based on their academic pursuits and artistic talents, which is a great start. There are many different criteria upon which to base a search, so don't limit yourself. A good brainstorming session can help you identify some of these avenues upon which to search. Also, look at any membership groups that you/your family might belong to (example: credit union, Mason's guild, union organizations), religion, nationality, disability, personal characteristics (example: are you tall or left handed?), places you shop, the city/state you live in, parent employers, etc.

In addition, keep a calendar handy (whether it's paper or digital) and make sure to note any deadlines you may have missed for this year along with the scholarships you are applying for. You will have additional opportunities to apply in your future years at school, and a calendar specific to scholarship deadlines will help you stay organized. You may even want to keep a separate email address just for scholarship searching to help keep this information separate as you sign up for different things along the way.

You will find some general search sites such as www.fastweb.com, www.schoolsoup.com, www.scholarships.com, www.studentscholarshipsearch.com, and www.goodcall.com. These are legitimate sites and you will want to use them, but they are heavily used by students all over the country - and they do require you to create accounts. Outside of these general search sites, you'll want to do some specific searches based on the criteria you found in your brainstorming session.

If you only have a limited amount of time to put toward applications, make sure you are applying for scholarships that have the smallest competition group. For example, if you only have time to complete one application and you are trying to choose between a national scholarship and an Oregon specific scholarship, go with the Oregon scholarship. You are likely to be competing against a smaller number of students and therefore automatically increase your chances.

Tips for Writing a Winning Essay

Some scholarship applications bring home the bucks—but plenty of others don't. When you put these two groups of applications side by side, the differences are like night and day. Visit the link above to learn some game changing techniques that could help you submit that winning scholarship essay.
